Excerpt: . . . process by identifying requirements that are not supported by commercial products so that the courts can reevaluate whether it needs to ( 1 ) keep the requirement or revise it to be in greater conformance with industry practices or ( 2 ) undertake a development effort to achieve the needed capability. developing a systems engineering life-cycle process for managing the D. C. Courts information technology efforts. This will help define the processes and events that should be performed from the time that a system is conceived until the system is no longer needed. Examples of processes used include requirements development, testing, and implementation. developing policies and procedures that will help ensure that the courts information technology investments are consistent with the 20 requirements of the Clinger-Cohen Act of 1996 ( P. L. 104-106 ); and developing the processes that will enable the D. C. Courts to achieve a level 2 rating - this means basic project management processes are established to track performance, cost, and schedule - on the Software 21 22 Engineering Institutes Capability Maturity Model. In addition, D. C. Courts officials told us that they are developing a separate transition plan that will allow them to use the existing ( legacy ) systems should the IJIS project experience delays. We will review the plan 20 D. C. Courts has decided to apply this act to its investments even though it is not required to do so. The Clinger-Cohen Act requires federal executive agencies to establish a process to maximize the value and assess and manage the risks...
