At the Hague Conference of 1907, one power had voted against every proposal to reduce the size of Europe s great armies and navies. That power was the German Empire, voicing the will of Prussia, its largest and most powerful state. Prussia owed its own existence largely to successful wars, and the German Empire owed its existence to Prussia. From a second-rate power in 1860, Prussia rose under Bismarck s policy of blood and iron to become the strongest military force in Europe. Bismarck accomplished this result by means of a military system which compelled every man in the country to serve a certain number of years in the army, and to be ready at a moments notice to join his regiment if there came a call to war. With a great military machine fully organized and equipped, Bismarck was ready for the aggressive wars by which he meant to make Prussia the acknowledged leader of Germany. Aided by Austria, Prussia in 1864 tore from Denmark the provinces of Schleswig-Holstein; next Austria herself was crushed by Prussia, and ousted from the German Confederation(1866); and finally France was vanquished, robbed of two of her richest provinces, and compelled to pay a huge war indemnity as the price of peace. While his victorious armies were laying siege to Paris, the king of Prussia was crowned German Emperor in the ancient palace of the French kings at Versailles (1871).
