The sulphur was not crossed so quickly as the tobacco dust, but within 24 hours the ants were crossing it freely. On one occasion the senior author planted a small. lettuce bed, and thinking to protect the seeds until they germinated, he spread over the surface of the bed a layer of tobacco dust covered in turn by a layer of powdered sulphur. The ants got the seeds. Tree tanglefoot, when placed about the trunks of trees up which the ants were traveling, checked them for periods varying from a few hours to three or four days. However, a more dilute form of this material, used with much success in the gipsy moth work in Massachusetts by Mr. D. M. Rogers, has recently been tested by the junior author with the result that in one case it kept the ants off the trees for as much as two weeks without being renewed. There is therefore a possibility that this special form of tanglefoot may have a use in the protection of trees. Kerosene acts as a repellent until the odor has largely disappeared, but a film of kerosene on water only affords a good floor for the ants to travel on. Various devices in the form of inverted troughs of tin or other smooth surfaces have been tried without success. Crude petroleum, of all the liquids tested, has proved to be the most effective repellent. When placed in dishes supporting...
