C. : United States Environmental Protection Agency, Office of Water, Office of Wastewater Management, 2006 OCLC Number: (OCoLC)70904350 Subject: Grants-in-aid -- United States -- Handbooks, manuals, etc. Excerpt: . . . Although many tribes are implementing successful water quality programs using Section 106 grants, it has been difficult for EPA to report national results for the Section 106 Tribal Program. Because of a lack of national tribal guidance on data collection and data reporting, EPA lacks comparable data across tribal programs that can be used to show national improvement in water pollution control on Indian reservations. This has become an increasingly critical problem as the emphasis on demonstrating results for all governmental agency programs has increased. One of the goals of this guidance is to make it possible to aggregate data in a way that allows EPA to assess national results associated with the Section 106 Tribal Program. The guidance provides a framework for evaluating program results and more clearly defines expectations and requirements for tribal Section 106 grant recipients. In addition to information on strategies for collecting and managing data, working with your regional EPA office, and specific reporting requirements, this guidance also contains numerous links to other resources that may be useful as you establish or develop your program. The framework of the guidance is based on three approaches that tribes can use to develop their water quality programs and includes programmatic and reporting requirements. (Chapter 2 provides more information on each approach to developing a water quality program.) EPA recognizes the diversity of tribal water quality programs. By describing three approaches to water quality program development in this guidance, EPA has attempted to accommodate this diversity and...
